

- 3) Find a faculty member who is leading this discourse at the specific university. Find one article that they have written recently that resonates with your proposed research topic. Note that article below. Write about why their research aligns with your goals and what you would hope to study under their tutelage?

- 4) Are there other departments that would supplement your studies while you are a doctoral student?

- 5) Does the location (beyond the school campus itself, looking to the city/state/country where the campus is based) benefit or add to your research capacity? If so, how?

- 6) What do you plan to do with your research after the completion of the program? How do you think this will shift the current discourse with regards to the global challenge you highlighted in your first answer?

CIPE encourages students to connect with a Yale-NUS faculty member to discuss these notes before writing their first draft of their doctoral research proposal.