CENTRE FOR INTERNATIONAL AND PROFESSIONAL EXPERIENCE

Greetings from CIPE,

This week, I want to introduce the newsletter with some housekeeping issues that we at CIPE are finding the need to address. Just looking at our calendar, I am struck by two feelings – such gratitude to the CIPE team who works so hard to bring all these amazing events and opportunities to fruition, and vertigo because there are so many things from which to choose. As you are deciding what events to attend, do remember that your classes are always your first priority. If a class precludes you from attending an event, ask a friend, your advisor or any of us at CIPE for what you missed. We are happy to fill you in.

Conversely, when you indicate you are coming for a CIPE event with outside organisations, whether a representative of a fellowship competition, a workshop, a networking session or a required donor event for some award you have received, you are making a commitment that needs to be honoured. Sometimes, it seems that the embarrassment of riches in terms of opportunities we enjoy here inures us to the fact that these are not common at most other institutions and we take them for granted. Remember that if you sign up, you must show up.

Now, in terms of the calendar, please take advantage of some of the terrific activities coming up. Come Saturday afternoon to hear about the research your friends and peers carried out over the summer. There are many presentations geared to life after graduation – jobs, fellowships or graduate school; take a look and see what looks relevant for you. We're always delighted to see you at CIPE events and hear what's on your mind.

Cheers,
Trisha Craig
Dean of CIPE

WHAT WE'RE READING

At CIPE, we are currently in the middle of fellowship season and getting to the point in the year when some of our Seniors will be working on graduate school applications. A very timely book, then, is How Professors Think: Inside the Curious World of Academic Judgment (Harvard University Press, 2010) by Michèle Lamont, who is professor of sociology at Harvard and the current president of the American Sociological Association. She is studying 'evaluative cultures', that is, how different academic fields use the norms and scripts associated with their disciplines to decide what constitutes good work. Lamont examines 6 fields in depth: anthropology, economics, English literature, history, philosophy and political sciences and examines how fellowship applications from those disciplines are discussed (often by those from neighbouring fields whose assumptions about high quality scholarship are quite different.) Well worth reading by those who are applying for fellowships, grants, graduate school, conferences, those who are majoring in any of those fields or anyone who simply want to know how professors think.
